Thirty-Second Week in Ordinary Time

The first reading this Sunday reminds us that there are always times of difficulty in our lives but that our hope is in the Lord. The passage from Maccabees is a terrible illustration of the persecution of those who believe in God. Today, Christians and Moslems, in the Middle East, are often attacked because of their faith; indeed, there is a suggestion that more people have died for their faith in the last hundred years than at any other period of history. The example of the seven brothers is an inspiration to those who suffer for their beliefs.

The passage from Paul's second letter to the Thessalonians begins with a prayer; this is a common feature of Paul's writing and shows us that there existed a very close bond between Paul and the churches he established on his journeys. It also reminds us of a very important pastoral practice; there is a great tradition in our church of prayer cards; by using these cards during a pastoral visit or when celebrating an important occasion, we can retain a memory of the prayer we have shared, and others may find in the prayer card a message that resounds in their hearts.

Paul, and his fellow Christians, faced the same level of persecution as the brothers in the passage from Maccabees and he urges us to put our hope in the Lord for "the Lord is faithful, and he will give you strength". He calls on us to pray for a conversion of faith among our neighbours and that those who spread the faith may be "preserved from the interference of bigoted and evil people."

The Gospel reading from Luke has often been the cause of much distress over the years, especially for those who have entered into second marriages and to whom the question raised by the Sadducees has real relevance to the love shared in those marriages. Jesus can see the malevolence of those who raise this question, it is essentially a trap they want him to fall into. We will never know in this life what awaits us in heaven. Jesus reassures us that the love we share is eternal and that love will be fulfilled in us as children of God when we reach our heavenly home. David Frank
