Seventh Sunday in Ordinary Time

Holiness is not something we think deeply about. We tend to live our lives to the best of our ability, loving each other when we can, being good to our neighbours, as long as they do not interfere with our lives, and being good citizens. To most people this is the natural way to behave, we try to get on with our lives and survive as best we can. But is this enough? Today's readings call us to respond a higher power, a call that asks us to use whatever gifts we may possess for a greater good. They question our attitudes and our responses.

The Lord speaks to Moses. He commands him to remind the people that they are holy as God himself is holy. There follows a list of signs of holiness. Each one speaks of our attitude to our neighbour. These signs are much more than merely getting on with each other, they are signs of love, the love that we should have for each other; and for ourselves, because hatred not only destroys love but it can destroy ourselves.

Paul takes these ideas to a whole new level. He calls us "Temples of the Holy Spirit"; we are not just human but sacred to God, and God protects those who love Him. Paul then goes on to consider the wisdom that we proclaim, the wisdom of man is far from the wisdom of God. We cry vengeance on those who hurt us, God asks for Forgiveness. We belong to God and as His chosen ones we need to follow His ways even when this seems like foolishness in the eyes of men.

The Gospel reading follows on from last week as Jesus continues to teach His disciples about how they should act in the face of sin. He sees the evil that exists in our world, but He knows that, unless we forgive, we can only prolong the cycle of misery and sorrow that retaliation can cause. At some point we have to stop, consider, and turn away from prolonging the effects of sin. Jesus is teaching us perfection in the eyes of our Loving Father. God sees the wisdom in forgiveness, we need to learn that each person we encounter is holy to God and our response must always be based in love for our neighbour. David Frank
