Twenty-First Sunday Ordinary Time

Most people are not born leaders; they tend to look for someone else to lead and make decisions; they are content to follow. This is part of human nature, after all, if you did not make a decision then you cannot be blamed, and you can always criticise those who do. In every situation people come forward to lead, sometimes reluctantly, sometimes hastily, but always with, hopefully, good intentions. However, leadership can change people, some become roaring lions, others meek lambs, we should never take on leadership without considering the nature of the role required.

Peter was a fisherman; the impression given in the Gospels was that he was good at his job, and he had the respect of his companions; when Andrew met Jesus and spent the day with Him, he went afterwards to Peter to tell him about Jesus so that he could meet Him and make his own mind up. This indicates the respect that was given to Peter. On that first meeting Jesus singled out Peter; he calls him Cephas which means rock, from which we take the word Petrus or Peter.

In today's first reading Isaiah speaks of the appointment of a leader, the master of the palace. He calls this new leader a servant, for leaders should serve, he gives him authority, entrusts him with the keys and the power to include or exclude others. A father figure, he should treat all as his sons and daughters, keeping them to the right path. He is there so that the Glory of God can be made manifest. Paul reminds us that God's choice is not our choice; we cannot know the mind of God, never penetrate His motives, or understand his methods. "All that exists comes from Him, all is by Him, and for Him".

The question "Who do people say I am?" is one that each of us must answer. Peter, taking on the mantle of leadership, is clear in his reply "You are the Christ, the Son of the Living God". What inspired Peter to this outburst? Was it something that had been growing in his heart and understanding over the months and years spent with Jesus? We cannot know, but from this moment Peter is set firmly on the road of leadership and, for him, there is no turning back.
